I will be the first to admit that I'm not a designer. I'm a photographer that happens to dabble in the Photoshop editing side of the business. I love Lightroom, but not as much as Photoshop. I use Photoshop for almost all of my work. I should note that I'm on a PC running Windows 7, CS6, 64-bit and 16 GB of RAM. I use the 32-bit version of Photoshop. Earlier versions of Photoshop were quick and efficient, while the newest version doesn't seem to be any faster (at least not at lightroom.adobe.com). The learning curve in the new version was much steeper than in previous versions, which means I still have to get used to the new keyboard shortcuts, and I find my hands lose some of their fine-tuned mouse skills. For what it is, once downloaded into an offline platform, this is a pretty good little program. However, I'm not quite sure this is a 10,000 photos workflow application. As far as I can tell, during image edits, you can only do one thing at a time. You cannot open the Image Info dialog, then go back to your image, be presented with the info you previously calculated, AND go back to your image. I just switched to Elements 12 from Photoshop 11. I downloaded it on a brand new Macbook Pro. Installation went fine. I'm a Windows' guy and it worked as advertised for the first 10 minutes before it crashed. I'm not going to stick around long enough to spend time trying to figure out what's wrong. No problem with features, price or performance. I'm sticking with Elements forever. Until Adobe makes an OSX driver for the old Mac versions of Elements I'll never use Photoshop again.
