WASHINGTON (Reuters) - The chairman of the U.S. House of Representatives intelligence committee on Friday called on the U.S. government to investigate the appointment of U.S. President Donald Trump's former national security adviser and his son to positions of influence, including an ambassadorship. The chairman of the House of Representatives Intelligence Committee, Republican Congressman Devin Nunes, speaks on the weekly Republican conference meeting at the U.S. Capitol in Washington, U.S., December 14, 2018. REUTERS/Aaron P. Bernstein In a letter to the top U.S. intelligence official and the White House, Representative Devin Nunes said his panel was “beyond dismayed” that William Burns, U.S.

ambassador to Russia and former deputy national security adviser under President Barack Obama, had been approved by the Trump administration. Earlier this week, Trump's son-in-law, Jared Kushner, was named as a senior adviser to the president, removing one of the few senior roles held by someone who was not actively involved in the campaign. Nunes, chairman of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, said he had asked his committee to investigate why Burns was selected for the posts and whether his son, David Burns, had improperly benefited from his father's position. National Intelligence Joseph Maguire. Representatives from the White House and National Security Council could not immediately be reached for comment. In a letter sent to the heads of major U.S. intelligence agencies on Thursday, Nunes accused current and former U.S. government officials of working with Democrats to investigate Trump and his associates, and said the matter was being investigated by Special Counsel Robert Mueller. Nunes has complained about what he has described as “unmasking” by U.S. intelligence agencies of Trump campaign communications and has stepped in to block progress in a congressional probe into possible Russian interference in the 2016 presidential campaign. “We have a lawyer working for us on the process to unmask and we are very encouraged by the fact that many of the unmasking applications have been made since we took the gavel of the House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence back in October," Nunes told Fox News

The system will then look up the people in the database. If we are a user of the default list, we'll see the first human in the default list. If we want to see whether other people are in this role, we need to create our own list of guests. Create a custom role that has a single person. If you want to display guests who have another role, you might create a custom role type that has a single person in it. In this case, you'd want to create a role with someone specific. Let's say we want to see guests who have jobs. We can create a new role type named "WEMetrics Job" that has a single person.
