Since 1980, people have used the app when things start shaking in their area. It happened to our two Alabama earthquake monitors. While on vacation in Virginia, two of our readers set up their own Seismic Signal Monitor system. On the morning of June 5, 1980, after an earthquake happened, a man named Frank Bursler, alerted the entire community to the danger with his earthquake alarm app. Bursler lived in a small mountainous town called Fidler, Pennsylvania and after the earthquake, he was still awake, waiting for it to happen again. So he decided to use his home computer to sign up for a smartphone app called 'Earthquake'. At 12:36 A.M., on the morning of June 5, 1980, he got a good morning message on his mobile phone. But he was puzzled when he noticed that he received 3 messages in a row, because they all said 'Earthquake.' The man would keep receiving text messages about an earthquake for weeks and by June 5th, the phones finally stopped working because of the constant on/off.
