The .I tried to force it on my cat a few years ago, with no luck. Sometimes I use yogurt on my cat's tongue to make them swallow things more easily. It works pretty well. I do however suspect that it may be an anemic issue in cats, which can be pretty dangerous. You need to exercise your cat, it will get better. Make sure that they get some food, and if you can, you should give them supplements as well. I would be wary of using the domestic version of ferrous bisglycinate, it hasn't been tested on cats. It's a great nutritional supplement for humans and horses, but my sense is that if a cat eats a sufficient amount of food to properly absorb it, it's in their system long enough to properly absorb the protein from the supplement. In addition, they enjoy eating it. If your cat like cat food, try that first, before trying supplements. A supplement is only as good as what you give them. What you give them is up to you
