This study systematically examined the fast nutrient cycling of urea, ammonium, nitrate, and their subsequent leaching, using two treatments of nitrification-amendment (N-A) and no N-A (control) in the perennial paddy soil. Urea was applied during the whole rice-growing season in 2006 and in 2007, and the plots were harvested in August. The results showed that the quick leaching of nitrate and ammonium due to urea-induced nitrification was much higher in the N-A (0.50 and 0.43 g-N m(-2)) than the control (0.12 and 0.21 g-N m(-2)) plot. The N-A treatment significantly increased nitrate uptake (1.08 mg-N g(-1) VS 1.19 mg-N g(-1)) and leaching (2.76 mg-N ha(-1) VS 4.01 mg-N ha(-1)) compared to the control. Nitrate use efficiency was estimated as 52% in the N-A treatment and decreased to 32% in the control. The nitrate leached from the N-A plot had less residual N and more NO(3)(-) than that from the control plot. The leaching of nitrate from the N-A plot decreased with depth to a greater extent than that from the control plot. The leaching of 595f342e71
