Luminous, a game without turns, is a fantasy card game where players play a game of cards with their friends. However, cards don't have ranks or points, but cards do have Colors and Abilities. A Color can represent any kind of identity, whereas an Ability is the power that allows you to do something with the cards. In this card game, players can easily learn new cards and new game styles by choosing a card they like, and learning the card's abilities is done by playing it with another player. Additionally, there are special items that give players an advantage in the game. Players play games in a simple and casual way using a game console. However, our card game doesn't have turns, and players don't get any special items just by playing the game. You can enjoy a game where both players are enjoying without having any special conditions or goals. In addition to that, we have upgraded the multiplayer features of the game. Players can play games with friends anywhere, and we have added a new event system to it! In addition to that, we have added a new card display system. We value casual games that just let players enjoy while playing. So we expect that you will enjoy playing this game. Please feel free to report any bugs or questions you have. FEATURES

- Totally new, modern, and compact card game
- Play solo or with friends, anywhere and anytime

This game is developed by one man, as a labor of love to create a truly unique, deep-seated experience. My goal is to present a story-driven, action-RPG inspired by the many great adventures of an all-but-forgotten past generation of games - the adventure game, as you may know it. This will be the first-ever game from this developer, and I have the degree of personal investment and experience to carry it out. To ensure a full experience for gamers, I decided to develop it all in-house. This means that I will be responsible for: * Design * Art * Programming * Audio * Sound/music * Level Design * Scripting (Story/Dialogue/Dialogue) * Gameplay

About This Game's Funding: This game is fully funded, with a budget of $90,000. About This Game's Production Timeline: CURRENTLY IN PRODUCTION. I'm currently designing, developing, and animating the game. I'm currently at approximately 60% completion.

- Design: High frame-rate graphics, lightning-fast pacing, slick interface, massive inventory, original songs, fully animated cut-scenes, and more.
- Concept: A deeply-personal, emotionally-driven story steeped in ancient symbolism, realistic experience, and timeless tropes.
- Programming: C# - Unity3D engine - 2D and 3D graphics
- Combat - Class System - Inventory - Environment - Spriting - NPC Scripting - Locations - Ship Cinematic Loading - Audio: Massive original soundtrack - Audio FX/SFX - Level Design: Prehistoric environs and caves - Magical and otherworldly regions - Racing - Scoring -

Speedrunning - Top-down scenery - Scattered areas of HUD/UI

About This Game's Goals: This game is designed to serve as a comprehensive, character-driven, narrative-driven challenge for myself. It's meant to be a mature, adult adventure game, and I've reserved the language, themes, and subject matter to make sure the game has the maturity level to match. Therefore, I want to ensure that all of my games will never compromise artistic integrity - no matter how deep or ugly the technology gets. My goal is to craft a game that will challenge the player, and make the player think. I want the player to experience a story that resonates strongly with the player, and also forces the player to think. This is a

Primal Coffee: Proud to be organic Thursday May 9, 2014 at 11:30 AM
May 9, 2014 at 11:43 AM NEW ROCHELLE — Justin Rejebalski, the owner of Primal Coffee, says the three minutes it takes to brew a cup of coffee is more than just making it time to enjoy the smell and taste of good coffee. For him, it's also about protecting the water that goes into the brewing process. By Jennifer DaviesGateHouse News Service NEW ROCHELLE — Justin Rejebalski, the owner of Primal Coffee, says the three minutes it takes to brew a cup of coffee is more than just making it time to enjoy the smell and taste of good coffee. For him, it's also about protecting the water that goes into the brewing process. Rejebalski's coffee shop has "organic" on a sign in the window and hosts Saturdays at Open Studios with "organic and sustainable friendly" signs at the entrances. After using tap water for about 14 years, Rejebalski was swept up by the organic movement several years ago and began drinking organic coffee. It's not just about saying organic, he said. It's more about protecting the water we drink as well. "I haven't been drinking tap water for years, and my parents aren't drinking it now," he said. So he gets his coffee from Costa Rica. He imports the coffee from a cooperative called MACO. It stands for "Mito de Coco," or "Coffee of the Farmer," and touts itself as "the first Latin American cooperative founded in 1992 and inspired by the cooperatives of the Southwest United States." He prefers the quality of the coffee that has been "forested." "It's a long-timed dynamic tradition," Rejebalski said. "They cut the coffee and process it without any chemicals or anything like that. Even when they're processing it, they are predominantly cutting and removing the pesticides." He said when coffee beans are processed, they are cut open, and the
