When you save a project as a cloud document, your files are automatically uploaded to a location on adobe servers that you designate. The preference controls are in the Photoshop window menu on the Web > Preferences screen. You can download copies or cache your projects, which save you some space and reload quicker; however, you will have to re-upload your files when you want to modify them or to save your project with a different name. Where do the images come from? They can be from your cloud drive, or from any other drives that you designate. To share the cloud environment, set up the document. You can also invite friends to work on the project. Reviews can happen online, through email or through the web. And they work offline, too. Each person can check out the files and even modify them without having a previous review approved. In every way, Photoshop CC makes it a breeze to collaborate with others, regardless of whether you are using a Mac, PC, tablet or an iPad.
