I would say "yes". The only thing I can say to that is that Photomatix Pro 2020 also has a RAW editor. Besides that, they are really the most remarkable ones! The new part is that you can sort of create clips, but I didn't really like it. You can create all kinds of clips and split them, but it's not possible to name them and so it can't really be used. But of course it's a great upgrade! (Also some new lens effects: pinhole, angle and fish eye) It is popular for people to create adobe photoshop tutorial for designing projects, if you try it, you can learn to create a lot of designs. This program is great for photo editing. Adobe photoshop 2020 is super good program for design to create nice looking projects, it's easy to edit images, and is very flexible. Many designers and photographers prefer to use this software than using other photo editing program. I completely agree with this point of view... Lately I've been working more with Photoshop and the user interface is pretty intuitive. Previously, I've downloaded Photoshop X for the web which is a full version of Photoshop, and always had a quick reminder to open the main file in Photoshop X. Now though, all I have to do is click the icon. The app is beautiful too, although it's missing a few things. It's missing a way to make a selection frame when copying or pasting a layer or selection, and an option to re-size windowed images in the fullscreen version. It's a program almost everyone had to have for its flexibility, so losing it seems a little disappointing. But if I'm missing a feature, I can always check the Web App version.

The technology leverages Adobe Sensei’s deep neural network, which uses artificial intelligence to understand complex visual concepts, and applies these insights to make visual enhancements. More Fun, More Flexible Filters

On top of increasing usability and allowing access to more features, the new filters also include a natural style that will further extend Photoshop CC’s ability to modulate the concept of contrast, tone, and color.
