and turning off Bluetooth when our devices are in no immediate need. We have also tended to keep all our available network connections constantly engaged. Which is why we find ourselves facing a problem with battery life at times of low network activity. Because most smartphones today allow multiple network connections to be used simultaneously, adding to the drain of the battery. In recent years, we have seen battery life become a major concern of the technology market. And, the reason seems to be no other than longevity. The advent of mobile and smartphones in the late nineties, and later the demands of having to constantly be connected to the Internet to be able to carry out your tasks, and the realization of a much extended battery life over the amount of time spent on a mobile phone. Battery life has considerably
