Unzips the MP3s and compares the MD5hash of each one to check for commonality. The output of this is a list that you can copy into Excel for comparison or you can compare it yourself to see if they match. (Just one selectable listbox on the same form) I have tested it and it works as well as any other MP3 sorter that I can remember. WinXP, Windows 7, Windows 2000 Message for Freeware file. DupFileNames is a utility to find duplicated MP3s on your hard-drive. It can search for files by name as well as by CRC32 and filenames. It can also compare files by both their filename and its CRC32. MP3s: If you are checking for duplicates in MP3s I assume your are looking for file name duplication or file name changes (i.e. MP3s that are the same but the name is different). The file check will look for MP3s that have the same file name but different lengths. However, you may be interested in checking for CRC32 differences. The CRC32 is calculated over the file's binary stream (i.e. the bit array of the MP3 or ALAC file). If the data is not the same then it is likely your MP3s are duplicates and file name changes are not a problem. If you want to detect duplicates that are by the same MP3, but have CRC32 that are different, then I suggest you to use the program below. The application is simple to use. When you first run the application it will display a dialog which asks for the directory where the MP3s reside. Once this is entered the data is displayed in two lists. One displaying the file names of the MP3s you searched for and the other displaying the file names that match. If the application is running in 32-bit mode then it will also display a toolbar at the bottom of the window. This toolbar shows the CRC32 sums of all files and an option to view the names of the files that have the same CRC32. It is possible to search for duplicate and/or different files by their file name. These files will then be displayed in a list. It is also possible to check for a specific CRC32 of all files. The FileName column will be grayed out if the CRC32 is the same. If the file name is different but the CRC32 is the same then the file name will be displayed in the Filename column. If the CRC32 is different then the file name will be displayed in the FileName column. Optionally it is also possible to compare two lists. These two lists can be files that have the same names or have different names. In the compare list, both sets will be shown in both columns (FileName and FileName). This is done by specifying the two list view types in the dialog. This allows you to
