Many thanks to SWLing Post contributor, W3RL (WoodsCJ), who shared the results of a recent comparison of superheterodyne radios between Raytheon, Elecraft and Icom. The setup consisted of two P25 dual-band radios, powered by an iPhone (iM2M capable, from Crown Trading, in Newington, New Hampshire) connected via a RF cable to a HackRF. I was able to reproduce W3RL's findings that the Icom appeared to be the most sensitive receiver. But the overall results were a shock! The difference in sensitivity between the Icom and the Raytheon did not seem to be nearly as dramatic as that between the Raytheon and the Elecraft. The Elecraft's radio was shown to be more than twice as sensitive as the Icom. The Icom was less sensitive than the Raytheon by an order of magnitude. The first test showed a gain of 18 dB for the Icom, 10.8 dB for the Raytheon and 9.1 dB for the Elecraft. The second test, which was done over a longer period of time, from 4:01 am to 5:40 am, showed gains of 12 dB for Icom, 5.5 dB for Raytheon and 7.1 dB for Elecraft. The Elecraft radio appeared to have one of the highest selectivity ratings, while the Raytheon receiver had the least. Finally, the lowest sensitivity signal-to-noise ratio could be achieved by the Icom radio. If anyone can tell me what I did wrong, please let me know. Are the gains just due to the fact that this was done on a rooftop in New York City, and at an elevation of 40 degrees? Pour la recherche de mots suspects de la phrase?: Scanning through the book, I sometimes find myself scratching my head and thinking, "What word's next?" and "What word's previous?" in the same paragraph. After finishing the book, my problems with the "What word's next?" part are somewhat solved, but now I find myself wondering what it is to be next to a word. Is there a future tense?! I'm currently typing this on a Macbook Pro, and even the white space between paragraphs on the right looks italicized. I'm relieved that I don't have to change the font of the book and re-publish, but I kind of like the results. What would you change?
