A Match Engine is used to control, adapt and simulate the in-game physics of player movement, resulting in new tools to analyse player movement, fine-tune ball physics, replicate player movement and dynamically react to and adapt to unusual tactical situations. This is achieved using a combination of physically-based modelling and detailed global player animation, showcasing the most detailed, realistic and physically-correct animation of players in the FIFA franchise to date. This work has been led in collaboration with the Lecce School of Computer Engineering and its founder, Giancarlo Politi.
