While HyperMotion technology is used in real-time on the pitch, we can't help but create variations of the method for our editor. While it's not possible to have every 'official' player performing all of the actions in real-time, the FIFA team is well aware of how the technology can be tweaked, and below you can find a first-person overview of how we ended up with our Team of the Year for FIFA 22. The Editor of Sports Interactive, Miles Jacobson, sent us the following 14-minute video showing several different ways of using HyperMotion technology, including the creation of the very first Team of the Year. Watch the video here: Thanks again to Miles for sending us this video! How was the Team of the Year created? First off, we would like to thank Miles Jacobson for his help with these, giving us the opportunity to create a team of our very own. We are more than a little excited about our Team of the Year, so without further ado, here's our EASA style XI, featuring some of the best footballers from the last season. Goalkeeper: Gianluigi Buffon (Juventus) Back four: Mats Hummels (Borussia Dortmund), Mikkel Nielsen (Freiburg), Virgil van Dijk (Southampton), Raphael Varane (Real Madrid) Front three: Harry Kane (Tottenham Hotspur), Sadio Mane (Liverpool), Mario Mandzukic (Juventus) Left wing: Dimitri Payet (West Ham United), Antoine Griezmann (Atletico Madrid), Philippe Coutinho (Liverpool) Right wing: Cristiano Ronaldo (Real Madrid), Gareth Bale (Real Madrid), Gonzalo Higuain (Napoli) Centre: Leo Messi (Barcelona), Luis Suarez (Barcelona), Robert Lewandowski (Bayern Munich) Here is the video that Miles Jacobson created:  After the video was released, we have received numerous requests to create a Team of the Year using this method, so we decided to put together a few more teams for your enjoyment. Of course, these are all from FIFA 22, and if you wish to play with this XI on any of the other game modes such as Multiplayer, Career

Features Key:

- Unrivalled ball physics: No other FIFA game offers the unrestricted, natural physics gameplay of FIFA 22. Two distinct ball-carriers take control of the match, as every controlled action performed in the game is weighted according to real world impact. The 3D physics also affect your player interaction in the game, meaning every touch is realistically handled. In addition, players now have new methods of developing skills that were not present in FIFA 17. Moving the player up and down the pitch by pressing a single button allows you to combine, controlling the ball with an array of new drills, such as backs to goal, rifling shots and performing acrobatic tricks.
- A new look: The team have announced the first official gameplay trailer for FIFA 22. Check it out here:
- New celebrations and animations: EA has added new and innovative celebrations to the game so players can celebrate with impunity. Players can now perform bicycle kicks, slaloms and swivels and additional new animations during ball touches for free kicks and penalties. Swivels have been enhanced and work better off both players on and off the pitch as well as a whole range of new attacks.
- Visual fidelity and real-world skill move motion capture: EA's FIFA team looked closely at the pros from the matches played before and during the World Cup this year, and developed the new "HyperMotion Technology" — a game engine-powered set of gameplay systems designed to improve and contextualize player identification, assists, and control in huge, and diverse, situations. The results you're now seeing in the gameplay directly translate to a more authentic and realistic presentation.
- Defined man-marking precision, and all-new Defending AI: The smartest Defending AI system in FIFA's history. Proline is ready for the game's most difficult defenders like Neymar or Paul Pogba. Defenders will now ditch tacklers using Tweets, and read the game like a real player, adjusting their movement and placing the ball in just the right position.
- AI coaches: To increase the complexity of the tactical decisions the coaches make in their own games, EA has released an Evolution Mode for the game. Evolution Mode is about giving players more choices on how to develop and
