Players will now feel more responsive in the moment of the tackle, recover from a collision, or follow through with a header. With every movement of the player, the influence of your running speed is felt with more accuracy. The players feel more reactive, dynamic and connected to the rest of the action thanks to the comprehensive amount of motion capture data. The playing field also becomes more responsive, as the ball features a little bit more power at different height and it's possible to power the ball with multiple touches. The accuracy of the ball physics has been improved, as collisions are no longer being incorrectly identified between players. The improved ball physics delivers more accurate bounces and spins off the players. The ball is also being more precisely handled by the player, as he can now comfortably handle the ball while changing directions. The passing accuracy and accuracy of players' on-the-ball movements has been increased to make the ball more responsive and realistic. Recovery after a tackle is improved, the impact is more accurate and it's possible to recover from collisions with the player you just hit. The previous score multiplier based on goal differences was removed, and the progressions are now based on your overall performance. Your every touch of the ball is contributing to better player reactions. "Allowing players to experience this much motion capture data is a great breakthrough in the field of player motion capture." said Jens Hilgenboeck, Sr. Technical Director, FIFA. "The combination of simulation and motion capture data has allowed us to go even further than we could before and we are confident that 'HyperMotion Technology' will not only improve the overall gameplay experience, but also will serve as a foundation for additional features and game modes in the future." This new feature is already making its way to the game through a series of testing beta versions, and according to Hilgenboeck, the club-version of the game will be the first to fully incorporate this brand new feature. "When we launch FIFA 22, the beta versions will be among the first to feature the new 'HyperMotion Technology'. The latest version of our beta testing program will be made available to clubs this July, and we expect to roll out the update to our clubs for training and preseason ahead of the new season in September."
