hawaaa hawaai is all about ordinary people. those who cross our paths every single day, but we barely glance at them. neither do we have the time or inclination to think of their existence. it's the story of willpower and determination. and it highlights the triumph of the human spirit in the wake of adversities. it makes you realize that those who dream have the power to move mountains. it's about ambitions and finding the hero within. the technical brilliance and the movie's melodramatic moments come out of nowhere. amole is a master at using the smallest of nuances to create interesting scenes. there are some beautifully shot scenes and also some dramatic moments that show the director's proficiency in his art of storytelling. but in the end, the film veers away from melodrama and becomes a romantic comedy. the problem with hawaa hawaai is that it doesn't possess the power to sustain you throughout the film. the journey is captivating, the acting is robust, but the emotional quotient isn't there. it's a jigsaw puzzle with no picture. the characters are two-dimensional. the story could've been bigger. amole seems to be gilding the lily. but his expertise in storytelling and his command over emotions are still unmatched, you can't help but admire the filmmaker. what makes hawaa hawaai different is its wonderful performance by the kids. this is the first film in india that has given a voice to the ordinary child. the kids on the sets speak their hearts out and the truth is that the characters emerge from them in a very realistic way. saqib saleem's lucky is the star turn. his lucky is a character who is doing the right thing, but is never allowed to thrive. amole gupte has a knack of creating a character who is good at doing the right thing, but is always held back by circumstances. saqib sells his character with his expressive eyes, his body language and his endearing interactions with his friends.
