You build an army, of course, so is that a good idea? Game designer Mattus Tyck tells us what it takes to launch a successful Kickstarter campaign and how video games can make a difference. There's an old saying, "Deserts make great allies; but bad counselors." Sometimes, though, deserts are exactly what you need to make something happen. That's the case in the Middle East, where the Israeli-Palestinian conflict has been raging for decades. As a first-generation immigrant from Israel, I've experienced the tension first-hand, and I can't help but be a little conflicted about Israel's actions in this conflict. The country is founded on the belief that Jews are destined to be a majority in this land. But while it has made a lot of good things happen for the Jewish people -- including the creation of the Jewish state and the establishment of very important institutions like the Israeli Defense Forces -- the occupation of the West Bank and, most recently, the invasion of Gaza have all led to great suffering for thousands upon thousands of Palestinians. But how did this conflict come about in the first place? Long story short, someone wrote a book. It's called "The Origins of the Arab-Israeli Conflict," and it was written by Shmuel Ben-Shimsh c9d1549cdd

What's new in Impossamole:

(MT I-90, MT C-6) Trains Magazine has long held that the Official Midwestern Branch of the MBTA Commuter Rail (formerly known as the "Green Line") is the best commuter line in the United States -- possibly even in the world. It has a great American-retro atmosphere, a dense web of branch lines, many layover spots, and much, much less congestion than other major commuter rail systems. The only problem? A lot of lines in need of repair, varying degrees of paved to non-paved configuration, and one had-been branch line that was torn up so that it ran on actual railroad lines in the span of a state in the middle of nowhere. Some of this is covered in an in-depth article called "The Midwestern Branch: The Best (and Worst) Line in America," published in Trainz in 2007. The article also noted that, while quite a few mass transit departments who built their agencies' systems with legacy plans in mind, Trainz had to integrate a large bus system, which caused it to come up with a new mass transit system. Most of the planning, and certainly most of the Eastern Branch, works pretty smoothly in Trainz, but the northwest sector is a patchwork of different elements. Some exact copies of the current station diagrams and other assets exist for the state agency, and there is some as-of-yet-unbuilt infrastructure; but the MBTA has not been too forthcoming with any details, so thus far we have only a basic layout. The core has been placed mostly in primer material state; MBTA-era rail lines and stations have been "cut," laid out, and detailed in primer. East and northbound service has been placed on an actual rail line, and there are plenty of layover spots for the fleet. West and southbound service is basically just suggestions; up until recently there wasn't much to go on in these sections, but we've placed one actual line on a start/finish line, and it's easy to add others to the main line. The advantages of an actual railroad are obvious. Still, adding all of the agency's main runs to this map and layering it over 439 runs for the commuter rail and electric trolley make even more sense; after all, the MBTA's commuter rail system should be top-notch and provide excellent service. So to put the line where it should be: in
