Plenty of add-ons exist for the Torq, and this is because there are so many creative uses for it. The Avids own DJ-level software, called Torq 2.0, is a great piece of software which can be easily added to the Torq by simply downloading the Torq-PLUS application. DJ-oriented effects, effects based on vinyl and Traktor Scratch functionality are all here, and adding the Torq as a controller to the software gives you a world of instant control. The Torq 2 software seems more like a first-generation product than Serato Reveal, at least, as it mostly works by following your cues. A feature which the Reveal lacks is the ability to edit a loop point using the Torq, but as with the Torq 1, the computer-based Cue Markers can be used to create loops in the Track view, and the tracks history is available on the function's user interface. As well as Cue Markers, the main advantages of the Torq 2 software are the built-in Effects Tool and Ableton Link, an easy-to-use live audio performance tool which also connects to the Torq and makes it a suitable controller for the Live application. Live's Performance Mode is a new route for Ableton which allows you to lay down and create tracks in real-time. All of this makes the Torq 2 an interesting option to take to gigs. The Torq 2 is an essential musical instrument for DJs, DJs and music producers in fact, and if you buy the Torq 2 without the Torq 2.0 software, you are missing out on a lot of functionality. Avid make reference to Traktor Scratch in their press kit, but it is important to note that the Torq2 has its own software development which makes good use of most of the Torq functionality.

Because its possible to make any song your own and have your own custom loop, a turntable, mixer, and controller all at the same time - something that used to be seen as impossibly advanced - is now actually rather easy. Torq makes it a lot easier to do. In addition, M-Audio has introduced a software player that plays the Torq device. It helps to make it a bit easier to get started. The player is now integrated into the M-Audio website. Torq 2.0 is a multi-function software/hardware controller with trackable timecode and looping. Since I own a Shure wireless vocal microphone, in addition to a HP 2400 SE mic, it is a convenient way for me to record guitars and bass, without using a multi-track software. It records up to 16 tracks. AVIDs DAWs are already some of the best out there, and Torq has integrated many of the most notable features of Traktor and applications. The Plus version of Torq allows you to back up your Traktor projects on the My Projects page of the Torq website, which you can access from any room in your house. The inclusion of MIDI sync, MIDI mapping, and the MIDI support that Traktor Pro offers are also extremely useful. My only gripe is the size of the controllers. With only one USB port available, it seems like I spend a lot of time scrolling to the MIDI page to control both the master bus and any racks. The Quark2 has some of the best audio processing tools out there, but this particular version was nearly identical to the previous version. It has a decent editing suite, and the production tools are second to none. Timecode is supported, and the U-Control gives you all the levels you need to get the volume up. " The reason it doesnt have a U-Control, is because they use a built in analog volume control, rather than offering a digital control panel. The Audition series has some funky pre-amps, but some of the plug-ins are a tad better than others. An interesting feature of the headphone output, is that you can adjust the threshold that separates the tracks from the mix. This is great if you have the headphone cables on a flexible PCB. I found that setting this to 5 seems to work for me, regardless of the source. 5ec8ef588b
