own citizens and respect their culture, language and religion. This is done in order to strengthen the family and society. One of the best ways to create a more generous public culture is to provide good jobs and a respectful way of life to the workers who produce the goods and services that are used by the state and by all of its citizens. Their rights to work, earn a living and to a decent life must be respected. A just and generous social order is one that is based on the values of justice, solidarity and charity. It values freedom and an equal right to work. The ability to earn a living is also a basic right of a personal dignity that is shared by all members of a society. Our fellow citizens can be healthy and happy only if their rights and obligations in different areas are respected. They can enjoy their freedom of conscience if their choices are respected, even if they are inconsistent with the beliefs of others. Freedom can be enjoyed only if there is peace, and peace can be achieved only when there is justice. All our social and political institutions must be at peace with justice and with each other, because it is almost impossible to resolve certain conflicts and promote the common good without their active participation. This applies in particular to the concept of free market competition. However, in order to ensure its sustainability in an increasingly globalized and interdependent world, the principle of free market competition must be limited by the correct use of political and social means of management.[792] Another good practice would be to give an absolute priority to subsidiarity. This principle of subsidiarity requires that decisions be taken at the lowest level of political government that can act.

These sentiments are of great importance today. In order to define properly the universal common good and the international order in which human beings will live, we need a model of the common good that will be good for all of humanity.[880] In a certain sense, it is in this connection that international politics, with its constant and inescapable element of conflict due to the various interests of diverse peoples and states, can offer a unique possibility of bringing together the two concepts of universal and common good, of order and of harmony.[881] However, for the world community to live up to its obligations, the moral and cultural force of freedom must be properly transmitted to all peoples and used for the common good of all humanity, in which all peoples, each in its own way, can develop for the common good of all of humanity.[882] 42. Moreover, as is well known, a person has a right to life and a right to honor. The continuation of life requires the free intercourse between persons and, on the other hand, respect for the dignity of every person must respect and promote his life. This type of respect and promotion is a moral obligation of society and also of the Church. It applies to every person, Christian or non-Christian, native or immigrant, rich or poor, found or forced to emigrate, without distinction of race, color or social status.[883] - Religion and society must work in a united way in order to promote respect for the dignity of the human person. 5ec8ef588b
