Network Magic can also be used to help you keep track of the security patches applied to the systems, also keeping you informed when vulnerabilities are discovered. Network security alert notifications can be configured to notify you when a firewall, router, or PC has been compromised. The alerts can be set to send emails, SMS messages, or even an instant notification if a message is available. It gives MSPs a way to notify their clients when outages occur without the client having to be present. Network event logging will record all of the activities going on on the network. This is great for investigating network problems or when a security breach happens. Network Magic also serves as a quality check on the servers and works to ensure that your servers are up and running. It can check the files available, database server status, checks for update server availability, checks for mail server availability, checks that server applications are running, among other servers. It can also scan for open ports, fix system registry errors and check that the antivirus software is current. Network Magic is much more than the tools that a network technician would use to manage networks. It also serves as an MSP manager to keep track of all of the servers and equipment that you are responsible for. It will tell you which servers are up, which are down, what the status of the application is, how much disk space is left and how many users are currently on the network. Information is sent in a structured way so that you know what information you should be looking for and how you can view it. This gives you a complete picture of your infrastructure, which allows you to plan better.
