Benedict will visit Ireland this weekend, where he will be the highest ranking Catholic cleric to visit Ireland in two decades, and is expected to address the issue of clergy sexual abuse there. The Catholic Church has had to grapple with charges of a cover-up of the crimes of sexual abuse committed by its priests. In a German-language interview broadcast last week on Radio Maria, the Pope spoke about the crisis in the Catholic Church. He said the church had no guilt in the affair, adding that "no one has ever claimed that we failed in any way." Watch Dr. Richard McBrien explain the Pope's "repentance" comment on CNN's "The Situation Room" Listen to the Pope's comments "We must ask ourselves if we are guilty," he said. "But if you ask us today, no, we do not have to be guilty of anything. "The fact is -- we have nothing to reproach ourselves with." Benedict's comments were reminiscent of those made in a 2007 speech to the German bishops in which he said the church had lived through a period of great "self-reflection." In July, the Vatican said the Pope had met with Catholic sexual abuse victims in St. Peter's Square in a meeting that lasted about an hour and 30 minutes. The comments were made during an interview with Catholic radio station Radio Maria, an interview that was broadcast last week. During the interview, the Pope was asked about how he was facing the crisis. He responded: "What is the situation 1cb139a0ed
