Radiographic changes of the growth plate during longitudinal growth in children. This study examines the change in weight distribution in growth plates throughout childhood. Forty-two children, aged 3 to 18 years, were examined. Ten patients had panendoscopy, and growth plates in the panendoscopically visualized proximal femur and distal tibia underwent measurement. The remaining 32 children were examined by full-field digital radiography. The parameters measured were: anteroposterior (AP) dimensions of the whole growth plate, and the dimensions and area of the growth plate zone (GPZ) and calcified cartilage zone (CCZ). The daily width of the AP growth plate increased significantly in the study population during longitudinal growth. This daily increase was 14.5 ± 0.66 mm/year. The radial size of the growth plate increased in the distal tibia, and no growth occurred in the proximal femur. During the childhood period studied, the growth plates were more radially elongated in the distal tibia than in the femur. The width of the GPZ grew slowly in children aged 7-12 years, and rapidly in children older than 12 years. The length of the GPZ in the distal tibia (1/3 of the total length of GPZ) was significantly larger in children older than 12 years than in children younger than 12 years. The area of the GPZ became larger in children younger than 12 years. In children
