Bugs: I use Delphi codeQ: How do I find the type of a compound bracket? What is the type of the compound bracket [A B] for any two TypeScript classes A and B? I do not want to use the toBindingOf() function. A: No such thing, brackets are just generic brackets, they are not a type. They are used to represent a composite type, that is one or more types together. So [A B] is a list of types (potentially empty). The A and B don't have to be classes, they can be types too. You can use the following syntax to express what you're trying to do, where a is a generic type and b is a constrained type: class X { } class Y { } const a: X = [Y]; // ok const b: X[] = [Y]; // ok const a: Y = [X]; // ok const b: Y[] = [X]; // ok const b: X = [a]; // error const b: X[] = [a]; // error const b: Y = [a]; // error const b: Y[] = [a]; // error
