Alternative CODs: Crash Course is a spin-off from the larger Grand Theft Auto series, which is best known as a series of action-adventure first-person shooter video games. It was originally intended as a platform game but eventually it was retooled as an action game. Crash Course is a modern take on the classic third-person shooting genre. Gamers play as a character named Blaze whose goal is to survive as long as possible and to rack up a high score by executing the most stylish stunts, such as last-second jumps and 360-degree rolls. Players can play offline or online against others from around the world using a point-based currency system. Players work their way through 42 story-based courses, with each course representing one of the 42 levels in the game. The game received a generally mixed reception, although it has sold very well and was praised by critics for its visual presentation and many of its course and vehicle designs. AND MORE..."We're still meeting, we're still reviewing some trade assets," Popp said. "We're still looking at some of our free agents. But at the same time, we'd like to get something done today." There have been some talks to get Dwight Howard to Denver for Andre Iguodala, but that hasn't panned out so far. While Leonard has an $80 million player option for next season, it's possible the Hornets would like to keep him and pay him. Popp said at the last trade deadline that his interest in a young player like Thomas or Frye was to get them accustomed to the NBA while trying to make a deal to bring Howard to Charlotte. The Hornets gave the Spurs a first-round draft pick to bring in Kevin Martin. Asked if he would like to make the trade more attractive for potential trade partners, Popp said, "I'm not sure, I don't think so. I'm just telling you the status, we'll go from there." Trades like that don't happen often, but it's something to keep in mind as the season goes on. "We'll see how it plays out," Popp said. "We'll go from there, but those things are part of it." Defensive stopper Baron Davis has grown more comfortable as a power forward this season, and this week he admitted the reason for that is he's spending less time defending point guards. Davis said he realizes more how valuable he was at shooting guard when he saw how bad the Lakers were defensively against guards last season. "When you're defensive against guards, you have to play small, you can't just get a guy with your big man," he said. "It hurts us, because I'm not 6-foot-11, but I can get a guy to come off the bounce like Paul (Pierce), because I'm big, I can do that." Davis added, "It's a fine line between being a big guy who can't stop anybody and being an undersized guy, and they can pick my man and go inside." Red light, green light Shane Battier was thrown out for a flagrant foul during Wednesday's loss at San Antonio, but Popp said that was the first time that has happened to him. "This isn't something I've ever experienced before," Popp said.

Cryptark is an Action Puzzle game based on the 1986 coin-op game for the Sinclair ZX Spectrum called Crypton, by Brøderbund. You play the role of "The Combiner", a paramilitary spy who is sent to an alien planet, where he must stop an old enemy from obtaining an evil weapon which threatens the world. As you scan the landscape of the alien planet, you will find various objects which you can use to your advantage, from remote bombs to water guns. These weapons work in two different ways - your objective is to combine many of the objects you find in order to get the right one for the job, and using everything you've got at once to get close to your adversary. You must collect the required weapon in order to allow you to proceed to the next level, and you have a limited energy supply which will reduce over time as you fight and explore, so you must ration your energy carefully. A quick glance at some of the screens taken from the original coin-op shows just how similar the game is to its forefather: Just like the original, you start by selecting your first object. You then scan the ground and you see each one is a different color, and as you come closer to them, they become "live", and give you more information about their category and how much energy they would take to combine. Combining objects is a simple matter of pressing the correct combination of keys to do it - the top row of buttons on the ZX Spectrum are used to switch between items and combine them. The final touch is when your final weapon is revealed to you! To learn more about Cryptark, visit: www.cryptark.com
