Changes in Catalog	When a user searches a catalog, by default, the search results are displayed. Users can either always display search results or only display search results when they are actually selecting a specific image. The former is what we had in Lightroom 4 and the later is what Lightroom 5 offers. However, you can still display search results even if you aren't selecting an image, by activating the "always display search results" preference. But if you don't want to display search results from that point on, you can change that in the search preferences. Similarly, you can switch off display of the count of your image catalogs under the "nest count creation" preference.
Catalog Export to XMP	You can now export catalogs directly as XMP files. Now you can create your own XMP file if you want to. This will make it more compatible with the new "Previews" functionality. Better yet, you can import this XMP to Artistic too.
Smart Collection	Smart collections can be created in different ways. If you open or create a Smart collection in your Catalog window, it will be placed in the "Collection List" in the Lightroom application. This allows you to markup collections in context of their location. You don't need to use this every time now.
