Four-year follow-up of men treated for lower urinary tract symptoms related to benign prostatic hyperplasia with or without alpha-blocker therapy. To investigate the long-term results of a non-invasive therapy for the treatment of bladder outlet obstruction in patients with lower urinary tract symptoms (LUTS) related to benign prostatic hyperplasia (BPH), we conducted a four-year follow-up evaluation of a group of 120 patients who had been treated with a pure alpha-blocker drug (KCl Inj) and a group of 53 patients who had been initially treated with alpha-blocker and later, once or twice, with a prostatic needle biopsy. Initially, the patients had been randomized into one of two groups, depending on whether they had had one or two needle biopsies. A total of 15 men, 8 of whom had been treated with the prostatic needle biopsy alone and 7 of whom had been treated with prostatic needle biopsy plus KCl Inj, were excluded from this analysis. The remaining 121 patients were carefully evaluated at the 4-year follow-up period. The data from 94 patients (71 with two biopsies, 23 with one biopsy) were used in this analysis. The results showed that the patients with one biopsy plus KCl Inj displayed significant improvement of their obstructive symptoms when compared with the patients who had had two biopsies (P Trends in cardiovascular mortality for the Norwegian population, 1980-2004. Berlin, Germany – In a country where profiteering from the people has become rife, a farmer from the Indian state of Rajasthan is offering his services to Germans, who are in crisis – to charge them big bucks and collect the cash in advance. This farmer will go as far as setting up a mobile money-processing company in Germany, in order to draw them in. Waiting in doorways, lurking in the corner of supermarkets or lurking in empty railway stations, such migrant workers do a range of jobs that even some Germans find unsavoury, but are the cash cow of the call centres, retail outlets and hotels they work in. They are mainly migrants from India, Nepal, Pakistan, Sri Lanka and Bangladesh. Their numbers are growing rapidly. Farmer Gulsing Sahai, who lives in India, has no intention of working in Germany. He is looking for a more profitable and less arduous job. “I am an honest man,” he says. “But I am in Germany, living on German money, so why should I be honest?” Sahai’s services are catered for on a daily basis at his doorstep. “Every day I get about 20 people, not only Germans but also from the European Union, asking to go to Germany,” he says. “Every year, I make 20 million euros just like that. Just like a casino.” Sahai says he is making a loan to people who need money for a visa and who are willing to be paid at a 25 per cent commission. “Even if they die or go to jail, I will find them again because I keep track of their names, addresses, parents and so on,” he says. Although he is not a professional recruiter, Sahai has years of experience in this area. He charges up to 8,000 euros for a visa, but keeps the money. “He is a good, honest man and we need honest people here,” says Armin Braun, a German IT consultant, who was caught on camera pocketing almost 200 euros from a waiter who was scammed by one of Sahai’s many drivers. India’s Department of Foreigners was first alerted to Sahai after footage of him being filmed at the Frankfurt and Munich airports in Germany showing him offering people a visa
