DNA adsorption on a single cell micropatterned in agarose. A novel method for fabricating DNA-coated agarose microstructures is described. The patterning procedure employs an A2 optical pattern generator, a sequential deposition technique for depositing agarose solution and DNA solution in a microchannel and a developing bath. The single cell micropatterns on a 45 degrees slope are characterized by a bright field microscope, a fluorescent DNA stain, and fluorescence microscopy. An average surface DNA content of 12 micromol/l is achieved, with a quadratic increase in surface coverage with decreasing channel width. It

Cost of loyalty programme for corporates on rise New Delhi, April 24 (IANS) The cost of implementing loyalty programmes for corporates is rising with the companies responding better, claims a study. "Companies are moving away from two per cent of their business with the vendors and are moving more towards working with them on a long term basis. Corporates are committing themselves to provide an enhanced product and service proposition that will take them higher," said Himanshu Arora, regional senior vice president, Ernst & Young (EY), India. EY surveyed loyalty managers from one hundred companies —in India, Hong Kong and Europe— 570a42141b
