Because you have nested elements, you need to use a separate DOM selector for each (using Query's $()this would get you both out of your and tags, but then $()this is your), i.e. $() each(function) (var text = $()this).text(); console.log(text);); Previ film pirati sa kariba 1 ceo film sa prevodom na srpski 19 Previ film Q. MySQL table and user store I am designing an application in PHP. My database is MySQL. I have a table called Users that stores information about users. Then I have another table called activities, which stores information about user activity. For example, the user has registered a user account and has created a profile photo, and now she wants to invite her friends. She goes to her activities table and finds an activity where user id and users_id are linked. I want to store in the Activities table the id of the user where the activity is registered, so that I can link it with the user profile photo. My question is: How do I store in the activities table the corresponding user_id and user_id from the Users table? I would like to do this only once because the user activity table should contain the corresponding user data. So, I should not create a copy of the Activities table each time.
