Recent reviews from press: Extraordinary! Thanks to this game, I started playing games again. I liked Marble Parkour 1 game, but this is more challenging! (Expand) Difficult to say, I've only played one level so far. The first impression was good. I didn't recognize it was a ball game at first, but when you figure it out, it's not that hard, especially since you can go up and over stuff. (Expand) (Read more) to crosstalk. If the 4D Galaga is the weirdest thing on the internet and nowhere else.

It's like pinball meets Pac Man meets Tetris in a big building. But not in a good way. You're the last human standing and you're fighting to save your life and all you really want is the "human beacon" to save the world. Each level has traps, enemies and a nearly impossible goal. You'll be the last human standing in the galaxy. This game is weird. Try it! You'll be hooked in no time and you'll never find this game anywhere else. You'll have to play this immediately.

Science & Tech Steve Cohen Finances Bankruptcy

When Steve Cohen was nominated by the U.S. Senate in 2009 to be a judge on the U.S. District Court for the Southern District of New York, he faced a big question: Would this 29-year-old lawyer with no prior courtroom experience make a good judge? "There was this doubt, which was, 'Does this guy know anything about the courts?'" says his friend, journalist Dan Abrams. "He'd had one trial in his life, a homicide case, and there were two other lawyers, and I just remember walking away thinking, 'I hope this thing works out.' And it did." Since his 2003 appointment as the court's president, Cohen has molded his decisions to reflect, as he puts it, "what I learned as a child, which is that you can't earn your way into heaven." Now, as a jurist who has presided over hundreds of hearings and begun the process of settling some $15 billion in cases, he's come up with a new theory about the nature of law and, in particular, a new view of the workings of the Supreme Court: The structure of the court, he says, "affects how each justice interprets the Constitution." For Cohen, that concept comes from a belief, he says, "that the way a justice interprets the Constitution depends on the particular piece of paper he's looking at." "So when he hears another justice say, 'I'm interpreting the Constitution according to the original understanding,'" Cohen says c9d1549cdd

, short Takeover, mobile MMO wipe & the $20 mobile game charts It's the end of the week and like every week the world of games has been very, very busy. It's been a hectic time, or at least for those of us that cover games for a living. I'm not complaining though, because by its very nature it's a necessary evil for everything in life to just as fast paced as games - eventually you just have to suck it up and apply caffeine to keep up with the demands of work. So, was there any games news that really caught our eye? Well, not to put too fine a point on it, there really wasn't. That makes this week's news item that arguably stands out the most, as one of the most interesting and in some ways, important events to hit the gaming industry in a while. We'll just go through the show and list off the headlines because, well, that's what we do. Broke Protocol Broke Protocol is a crowd-funded sci-fi MMO, that aims to use the power of the crowd on the internet to help them deliver a great game. "We have a set budget, and our source of income is money that players give to us on Kickstarter," explains co-creator Richard Howard. "We've set out a plan of what the game is and we're getting on and starting to do it; people have some say about where it goes." Over on Kickstarter, it's just reached a little over half its total funding target and, at time of writing, is still number 10 in the category of "Games that start from a set budget". "I played Anarchy Online back in the day, and one of the reasons I really left that was the power of the player base, which can really dictate how large the server population is," says Howard. "The way it works in Anarchy Online is that your character dies - if you don't resurrect, you're out of the game. Essentially, Anarchy Online, to get into the world and start playing it, is like picking up a phone book and calling a random number in it. This sort of community is what we're after and what we're building, and that's what the funding's generated to get us there." For Howard, this is one of a range of crowd-funded and community driven games that are emerging, and something which a pretty large number of games publishers are also looking towards.
