Is there an easy way to detect whether an Android app is running in Preview mode? As in, if the phone is plugged in to a charger or in "Airplane Mode". I know that if I find out on an Android device that my app is running in Preview mode, I need to modify my code, and I'm asking if there is a simple way to do this. Right now I am disabling voice messages and the back button when in preview mode, but I've only seen 1 app (a music player) that does this already, and I want to know what other apps are doing. A: You can use the Settings.System.SCREEN_OFF_METHOD_REQUESTED constant for the requestCode. Also make sure your player is running with the proper permissions for
