Price: $4.96 Customer reviews (2) Mike (July 24, 2018) An amazing clipboard... I'm trying to like this clipboard as it does what it says on the box and it does it well. The first problem is the interface. As you open a program (I have Outlook) the pop up comes up that allows you to select the application that you want to use with the clipboard. If you don't select it, then you can't use it. This isn't a big problem, but it is important so I can use it. I then have to open that application to then put the contents on the clipboard. This is a bit of an anti-pattern. I have to open an application to put something on the clipboard. If it works well, why not just open a file or a program when you need to do something? Mark (July 20, 2018) Please... fix the bugs! Like all applications, you are looking for one thing and you get something different... I was looking for an addon to allow me to copy files that I have downloaded on my computer and then paste them in excel instead of having to open the file itself. It used to work, but now it doesn't. It keeps saying that it cannot make the paste. Daniel (August 28, 2017) ...it works more often than not. I'm using this add-on. Sometimes it doesn't work, sometimes it does, and sometimes there's no option to paste what I've copied (it's possible to copy the text to a rich text editor and then paste it from there).

I'm using Windows 10.Q: Nested page control I'm trying to make a page control where pages are nested one within another. The nested pages can be pretty complex (e.g. app with 15 tabs) and it should not be possible to break them so they are separate pages. This works fine in GMail (the App control section) - no top-level page can be removed. This is what I'm looking for: Source: Link A: No. I don't think it's possible. From the docs: Nested pages are similar to an out-of-the-box Content Panel, but with more control over the navigation options. The only thing close to what you describe is "Group by content type" 6a5afdab4c

Important? The operation is available only after installing the app. Q: How should I handle giving a variable a null value I have a variable that is set to null and changed to non-null, then when the program terminates I check if the variable's value is null or not, however, I don't know how to handle the case where the variable becomes non-null, but before that is the case it is null. Here is the code: `textBoxNumber.Text = playerInfos[counter].Number; if (playerInfos[counter].Number == null) textBoxNumber.Text = null; else textBoxNumber.Text = playerInfos[counter].Number; counter++;` This is the specific case, but what if the `playerInfos[counter].Number` is still null before the if statement is called? A: `if(playerInfos[counter].Number == null) textBoxNumber.Text = null; else textBoxNumber.Text = playerInfos[counter].Number;` That's just fine. But check for it first: `if (playerInfos[counter].Number == null) { textBoxNumber.Text = null; counter++; return; } textBoxNumber.Text = playerInfos[counter].Number; counter++;` A: If you're using a C# 6 compiler, you don't need to check for null in the first place, as the null-compare won't let you have a null value: `textBoxNumber.Text = playerInfos[counter].Number;` If however you are using an earlier version of C#, then you need to check, otherwise you have a `NullReferenceException` (probably) as the textbox would try to get the value from `playerInfos[counter].Number`, which is null (hence the exception). `if(playerInfos[counter].Number == null) textBoxNumber.Text = null; else textBoxNumber.Text = playerInfos[counter].Number;` Fine-needle aspiration and core biopsy in the detection of breast cancer in women with increased risk.
