This subproject is one of many research subprojects utilizing the resources provided by a Center grant funded by NIH/NCRR. The subproject and investigator (PI) may have received primary funding from another NIH source, and thus could be represented in other CRISP entries. The institution listed is for the Center, which is not necessarily the institution for the investigator. The long-term goal of our laboratory is to understand the mechanisms that control cellular differentiation from stem cells. The objective of this proposal is to address the mechanism by which Wnt signaling maintains Drosophila stem cells in a proliferative stage and regulates stem cell self-renewal in Drosophila testes. During our preliminary studies, we found that Wnt signaling maintains the stem cells in a proliferative state. The stem cells are marked by a row of nuclei surrounding a cyst. Within the cyst, stem cells form a cluster of cells with identical characteristics and with one stem cell per cluster. During the establishment of the cluster, cells transition from a proliferative state to a non-proliferative state. These proliferative and non-proliferative states are distinguishable by the presence or absence of fusomes, which is the extension of the centrosome that attaches itself to the stem cell membrane. The fusomes contain molecules that are important in regulating cellular differentiation. We hypothesize that Wnt signaling regulates cellular differentiation through inhibition of fusome assembly. The studies proposed in this application are designed to demonstrate this hypothesis. This hypothesis will be tested using the following specific aims: [unreadable] [unreadable] Specific Aim 1: We will examine the function of Wnt signaling in the proliferation of stem cells. To accomplish this, we will knock down the expression of the Wnt ligand in differentiating cells to assay if the Wnt ligand maintains stem cells in the proliferative state. We will knock down the expression of dpp in differentiating cells to examine if the non-proliferative state results from a decreased production of dpp. If this is true,

ProShow Gold Professional 7. 0 Update Download Here.RIVERSIDE, Calif. -- A Riverside police officer has been relieved of duty while an investigation is conducted into allegations of misconduct. Officer Paul C. Kimball was suspended with pay and issued a "notice of discipline" while the allegations are being investigated by the Riverside Police Department's internal affairs bureau. The investigation began after an employee from the company that provides services to the city filed a claim for a wrongful-termination lawsuit against the Riverside Police Department and the City of Riverside on Feb. 20. The employee alleges that he was wrongfully terminated when he refused to participate in the distribution of ballots in the city's March election. Kimball is accused of aiding the distribution of ballots on election day by handing out ballots to voters and instructing them on how to cast their ballots. The City of Riverside has confirmed that a Title 5 public safety position will be created to assist the city council and city attorney with the investigation.If you
