But, now, there's a threat to that supply chain. The oil boom of the last decade has created a large demand for natural gas, which in Texas has mostly been met by the Texas Energy Network, a Texas Railroad Commission-sponsored pipeline that delivers gas to consumers. But now, that pipeline could be in danger. The TEN pipeline, owned by El Paso-based gas company Kinder Morgan, is the nation's largest, and Texas is the only state to have its own natural gas supply. But a 2015 ruling by the U.S. Court of Appeals for the 5th Circuit invalidated the section of the North Texas law that authorizes the Texas Railroad Commission to regulate the pipeline, leaving it without a means of delivering legal and affordable natural gas to consumers. The pipeline, state regulators, energy companies and the Texas business community all have worked to fix the issue. The Natural Gas Committee of the Texas Legislature is now working on a fix, too. Despite Texas having a long history of oil, it's becoming a leader in the green energy industry, and the demand for natural gas is driving a lot of that growth. Currently, the state has about 80 million combined industrial and commercial boilers, but they're all fueled by natural gas, which is cheap and reliable. "If you look at the industries that are cutting the most carbon emissions, everything has moved to natural gas," said Matt Shuham, Texas Director of the National Wildlife Federation. To make the transition to natural gas easier, Texas set up an Energy Savings Performance Standard that required new Texas facilities to make 30 percent of their electricity come from renewable sources by 2030. That requirement drove the demand for natural gas. But if the state doesn't have the pipeline to deliver gas, the business community will have to find alternatives to legal cannabis or find the estimated 200,000 barrels of natural gas the state uses each day. "If you can't get the gas, you're going to have big problems," said Stuart Fraser, a cannabis consultant with The Logic Office. "If you don't have the gas, you can't manufacture and you can

Compatibility: Instructions Download the latest version of the emulator available on playstore (Because of legal reasons, you may have to disable your antivirus if you have any). Once you have installed the emulator, open it and locate the file called "USB_LOG.DAT" - the file can be found in the folder "Emulator\emulator. (For some reason, you will have to open the emulator file through the computer, and then check the folder Emulator\emulator for the USB_LOG.DAT file. Open the file and scroll down until you see the string 'Starting PS2 Sony PlayStation emulator....'. You should see something like this: Click on the 'Custom' button. Select 'Dump register' from the action menu. Click on the 'Debug' button. In the debug screen, scroll up until you find a row which is labelled "CPU R15, PC RS, PC LS", and you will see the info that you want to see. Remember, your actual CPU ID may be different depending on the PS2 model you're installing to your Android phone. After this, you can install your games, using your emulator to play. For this, go to your emulator's settings and select 'Emulated PS2 cartridge'. If you have any further issues with your emulator, I suggest contacting the developer.[Hierarchic classification of aortic stenoses by B-mode ultrasound. Comparison of the aortic systolic and diastolic velocity profiles]. The study presents a new aortic stenosis (AS) classification by B-mode ultrasound, dividing AS in 5 grades according to the aortic systolic and diastolic velocity profiles. The study also presents a comparison between the echocardiographic and the Doppler aortic flow profiles and the hemodynamic assessment by echocardiography. A total of 40 AS patients were examined. The Doppler aortic flow profiles and the echocardiographic analysis of the AS severity were assessed in all patients. AS patients were then divided into five grades according to the aortic systolic and diastolic velocity profiles. Grade I was present in 7% of the patients (4% had pure aortic diastolic or systolic velocity profiles and 3% had both aortic diastolic and systolic velocity profiles), grade II was found
