
Snakes Of India The Field Guide.pdf __FULL__

many of the endemic reptiles of central india are highly endangered due to habitat loss and poaching. apart from legal and illegal trade, there are many other factors that have led to their decline. climate change is leading to an increase in the unseasonal rains leading to erosion. the shrinking of habitats due to urbanisation is another major cause of the decline in some of the species of reptiles. central india has a rich fauna of reptiles. some snakes are known to kill and eat frogs, lizards and toads. some of the snakes use these small prey as a food source. they must be very dexterous and have developed a high degree of mobility and agility to engage in this type of hunting. certain species of snakes such as the pied viper, the common krait, the russel's viper and the common coral snake are known to prey on frogs. even the large toads are known to be killed by the common coral snake. the victim is initially stunned by the injection of the venom and then the snake continues to inject more venom. the larger the victim, the more venom injected. in addition to the aforementioned species, the following are some of the more common reptile species in central india: the cobra is a type of snake that is very common in india, and is found in all parts of the country. in fact, it is the most widespread snake species in the world. it is also the most venomous snake in the world. it is one of the few snakes that live in the water. while most types of snakes are night-active and active during the cooler parts of the night, this type of snake prefers to be active during the day. they are highly active during the day, which makes them a very dangerous animal. cobra venom is composed of a complex mixture of toxins that affect the nervous system, muscles, skin, eyes, and internal organs. the main effect of the venom is to cause paralysis of the bitten person and death. the effects are varied, depending on the species of the snake, the amount of venom injected, and the amount of time between the bite and the administration of the antivenom serum.
