Duet is a MIDI-Based game for Piano and Organ in the style of Interactive The Sims-like music games, currently available on Windows, MAC, iOS and Android. Duet, despite its simple visual appearance, is a deeply featured and immersive game. Where it differs from other music games in that is it not a turn based game like Guitar Hero or Rock Band, and it doesn't even resemble a game of choice, but rather a more of an unlockable "agency" game. Agency types? In Duet you are able to buy an agent of sorts in order to be able to grow your video game music style. An agent allows you to unlock skills as well as music channels and the ability to mix your songs or to create your own music style by mixing various tracks. As you continue to progress through the game you will be able to unlock more and more of these channels of songs and they will continue to automatically unlock as you progress with the game. Once all of the levels are unlocked the user is then able to mix songs and use those songs in their video game game, and to create new songs of their own. Something that is unique about Duet is that it is a physical piano and organ based game. This is because each song has a music track which a user is able to play, and then you play any single music track from any of the music channels that you have unlocked. Any single song that you can create with those random songs will be a part of the video game. Duet Gameplay Unlike other games of choice, the game itself has no real way to get into a game, there is no "Play" button to click or a "Buy" button to press. Instead, you will load the game while playing the music track that you want to use. The video game music track that you are playing will be highlighted in the game. You will see a bunch of different tabs on the top of the screen, such as the "About" and "Buy" tabs, but the game really just has one game mode, and that is to create songs of your own. Each song is created by playing the random music tracks that you select from the available channels of songs that you can unlock. Once you are finished creating the song you are able to play that song as a part of the video game, it will be highlighted in the game, and you can link it to the rest of the music on the music channels
