No additional genetic lesions in neurofibromatosis type 1: implication for simplex cases. Neurofibromatosis type 1 (NF1) is an autosomal dominant disease characterised by a high degree of phenotypic and genetic heterogeneity. Several studies have shown the involvement of both the NF1 locus and genes outside NF1 locus in the development of sporadic cases. To assess the genetic involvement of NF1 in simplex cases of NF1 without ocular manifestation. Multiplex ligationdependent probe amplification (MLPA) was performed in a large cohort of NF1 patients to screen for NF1 deletion/duplication by the use of germline probes of the NF1 locus and flanking genes. Additionally, a screening was performed by quantification of NF1 transcripts by quantitative real-time PCR. In one patient with clinical features of NF1, MLPA analysis of a large NF1 region (exons 2-36, introns, non-
