The book was originally published in a language that the author doesn't read, and so he decided to write a translation to get around his language problem. The original is a masterly satire on modern society in which the author's own family is used as the (hilarious) Trojan Horse to convey the insights into the mind of the modern man and his family. Vintages and Publishing has done an excellent job with this translation, and it is now available as a Kindle edition. Almost 500 pages of stream-of-consciousness memories of his life as a lighthouse fisherman's son, spanning generations. The book paints an unflinching picture of the conditions his family faced in a Scandinavian fishing village, before and after World War II. Penge gav år fodde Børnene gav råd * More Information. John Webster Hummel, who was 11 years old when his father came home at the end of World War II. His memories and the memories of his grandparents 0cc13bf012

Partitioning polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons to lipid classes from five industrialized North American regions: chemical and biological exposure. Partitioning of polycyclic aromatic hydrocarbons (PAHs) into lipid classes can be useful for chemical exposure assessments, environmental trends, and biological risks. However, information on this activity for PAHs with broader regions of the world is limited, particularly from North America. This study presents the results of PAH partitioning to lipid classes in five North American regions: the Eastern U.S., the South Western U.S., Atlantic Canada, the Great Lakes (GL) Basin, and Central Canada. Results were generally consistent among sample types and generally similar to those
