An unusual presentation of primary malignant melanoma: multiple cutaneous and mucosal deposits. Primary malignant melanoma can present in unusual anatomic sites. The present report describes a case with multiple unusual cutaneous and mucosal lesions. A 57-year-old man presented with nodular lesions on the tip of his tongue, on the lips and on the anal area. During endoscopic examination the oral lesions were seen to spread up to the pharynx and the anal lesions started to grow in size. The biopsy of the tongue and anal mucosa revealed malignant melanoma. The present report is the first to report an early invasion of malignant melanoma of the oral mucosa, pharynx and anus in a patient with primary melanoma. The present invention is directed to a method for manufacturing a trivex disc for use in an acoustic transducer. A trivex is essentially a disk having three flat outer faces, one face of which is in contact with a vibrating diaphragm. A trivex is therefore a generalization of a conventional disk and includes three flat faces. Trivexes are well known in the prior art. A typical example of a trivex as used in a prior art motor is shown in Canadian Patent Application No. 1308609, filed by the assignee of the present invention. This application is hereby incorporated by reference as if fully set forth herein. In a motor having a trivex, the flat face of the trivex opposite the diaphragm is in contact with a stud which vibrates. The vibration is usually caused by a permanent magnet located on the stud which is excited by the coil of the motor. The trivex is also known in the prior art to have a convex surface facing the vibrating diaphragm, which will cause the trivex to rotate. This kind of prior art motor is useful for the purpose of indicating when the motor is running. However, no signal is transmitted when the motor is not running.
