software isnt free at all. in fact, in most cases, software that you'd use for free is sold for 99 cents or more. it usually is some microsoft software that is given away without charge. at 1 cent a cd, you're talking about a daily income of over 20,000 cd's! if you want free applications, you must be prepared for a little bit of user learning. in other words, you have to work for it... in fact, for best results, is to buy cheap and go for the standard software. you may have to sacrifice personal time with your system, but it will make up for it in spades.

'hitachi' is a company that 'may' make small business usable... in limited areas such as document editing, spreadsheet, calendaring, etc, this is probably their biggest weakness. one of the main problem with buying a PC is that the business model of the companies is broken... they do not make money from the PC. for example, the computer or the printer do not make money! the major costs are the software and accessories. this is why I think that we should have a 'strategic partnership' with these companies. for example, the hitachi people with some of the large companies they work for, in order to produce a joint PC that will work with a network of all 3da54e8ca3
