A Commentary on the Passing Scene by Robert Paul Wolff
rwofff@froam.umass.edu Coming soon... The following items - plus whatever else I think of as I sit here in my box at home - will be coming to a theater (or classroom) near you sometime soon. If you haven't gotten your copy of the new NY Rev. yet, I strongly recommend it. It has been very well received. You can get your copies at In case you don't have a theater or classroom near you, here are some places to look for them if you do. You can also order them online. On Thursday, Robert Paul Wolff writes about Václav Havel, the dissident playwright who turned the communist world on its head in the 1970s and 1980s, then became Prime Minister of the Czech Republic, and finally president. For those interested in pursuing Havel, Havel's concept of human rights, the Church and the State, or the relative power of the three, this is a great week to read it. Halloween is the time of year I always remember my brother in Texas being obsessed with horror movies, and suffering from nightmares and night terrors. (I always hated it when he said, "Halloween is cheating, Dad. Cheating. They're not supposed to know who you are. They're supposed to be afraid of you.") But I never saw why it was such a bad thing for him 05a79cecff

A residential building in North York, Ont., has caught fire after being struck by lightning Sunday. On Monday, Toronto firefighters were called to the three-storey building, at 72 Yonge St. near Finch Avenue, but it was empty. The call came in at around 1 p.m., and firefighters found that the building had sustained two strikes from lightning. The first and third floor of the building were completely destroyed by fire, and the entire building was evacuated. Toronto Fire Capt. David Eckerman said they wouldn't know whether the lightning had caused the fire until after it was extinguished. The Toronto Fire Services District said in a tweet that there were no casualties and that crews are still at the scene. The Ontario Fire Marshal's office said it is investigating the cause of the fire.

Prudence P. Biernbaum Prudence P. Biernbaum, born August 27, 1910, in Brooklyn, New York, was a registered nurse who worked in Virginia, California and Maryland. She is best known for saving her patient's life, for which she won the John A. Hannah Medal in the American Nurses Association (ANA) in 1963. Early life and career Prudence Biernbaum was born on August 27, 1910, in Brooklyn, New York. She attended New York University and graduated with a bachelor's degree in nursing in 1931. From 1933 to 1940, Biernbaum was a registered nurse in New York City. She received her master's degree in public health nursing from the University of New York in 1937. After her education, Biernbaum joined the United States Army as a volunteer nurse in the Asiatic-Pacific Theater of World War II. After the war, Biernbaum worked at Johns Hopkins Hospital in Baltimore, Maryland, and Johns Hopkins School of Nursing in Baltimore from 1945 to 1950. She then moved to the Washington, D.C., area to work at Washington Hospitals where she worked until her retirement in 1974. Awards and honors In 1963, Biernbaum was awarded the John A. Hannah Medal in the American Nurses Association for saving the life of a patient. She received her award from the President of the United States, Lyndon B. Johnson in a ceremony on April 12, 1963, at the White House. In 1990, she was inducted into the Virginia Nurses Association Hall of Fame.

Comparison of the effects of subcutaneous and oral administration of vasopressin on the activation of the water-retaining effect induced by angiotensin II. To study the role of the P-antidiuretic hormone (vasopressin, AVP), in the mechanism of the activation of the water-retaining effect induced by angiotensin II (AII), we compared the effects of subcutaneous (s.c.) and oral administration of vasopressin on the activation of the water-retaining effect induced by s.c. administration of AII in conscious sheep. We also examined the possible implication of alpha-adrenoceptors and prostaglandins in the possible vasopressin-mediated suppression of the water-retaining effect induced by AII. We tested the hypothesis that the oral route is more effective than the s.c. route at inducing the expected anti-diuretic effect by vasopressin. For this purpose, in 10 conscious sheep, we infused AII (0.1 micrograms/kg/min for 20 min) either s.c. (n = 10) or orally (2.5 ml of a 5% solution) (n = 10). The anti-diuretic effect of vasopressin (AVP) (1 IU/kg s.c.) was also tested in 6 additional sheep. Plasma levels of AII were unaltered during AII infusion, as were levels of water and electrolytes. Moreover, plasma vasopressin levels were unchanged during infusion of AII. The s.c. injection of AII increased the excretion of sodium, potassium, and chloride, whereas oral administration was without effect. AVP by itself slightly decreased the excretion of sodium, potassium, and chloride. A s.c. administration of AII did not modify the anti-diuretic effect of AVP, whereas oral administration of AII increased the anti-diuretic effect of AVP by 36%. Moreover, AVP by itself increased the excretion of potassium and decreased the excretion of sodium. Our results do not support the idea that the anti-diuretic effect of vasopressin is an important element in the activation of the water-retaining effect induced by AII. The routes of administration of AII and vasopressin are different. The effect of AII on the excretion of electrolytes is different from that of vasop

Table of Contents: Closing in on a thousand years of Rust history by Nathan Brown It is a Rust blog, and a history one. The thing is, “history” has a sort of ambiguous connotation in the context of programming languages. What do you mean by history? Is it the nitty-gritty details of how the language evolved? Is it “key things people learned”? Is it about the past, present, and future of the language? This series of posts is meant to be
