A woman's face is the first thing that anyone notices. We tend to judge people by how they look. But what if your face could hide your identity? Some women are taking their looks into their own hands. To accomplish this, they're using makeup on their eyes, and then covering their eyes with bright green or pink contact lenses. So when she's out in public and someone looks at her eyes, they won't notice that she's wearing colored contact lenses. This can be particularly helpful for women who often wear their hair straight. To get the full effect, you must wear your contact lenses every single day. Then, when you go for a photo shoot with the lenses in, you can take them out and put a regular lens in. (Or you could just get contacts that let you wear regular glasses over them, and then you wouldn't need to take off your lenses.) It's a fairly simple process, but women who have done it before say that their eyes do take time to adjust to the change. Their eyes also have to get used to being in contact with something all the time. 09e8f5149f
