TRIAL.Modulation of keratinocyte growth and motility by TGF-beta. The functional importance of TGF-beta1 in normal skin is now well established, but little is known about the role of this growth factor in cancer. Although TGF-beta1 has been shown to inhibit keratinocyte growth in vitro, only a limited number of cell types are known to synthesize TGF-beta1. We report here that, in the human keratinocyte cell line HaCaT, TGF-beta1 has a potent mitogenic effect. Growth inhibition was found to be dependent on a synergistic effect between TGF-beta1 and phosphatidic acid. In order to elucidate the function of TGF-beta1 in keratinocytes, we studied the effect of TGF-beta1 on cell motility by using the "scratch" assay on cultured HaCaT cells. This analysis showed that TGF-beta1 was able to significantly increase the rate of migration of keratinocytes in vitro by 50% in 1 day. As the mechanism by which TGF-beta1 enhanced migration could be linked to the control of cell proliferation, we also investigated the effects of TGF-beta1 on DNA synthesis
