I have a library written in c++ where a class library "X" is subclassed from an "Original Class". That is the original class is called "BaseClass" and class library X is called "DerivedClass", both of these classes are contained within a library. 1) I have created a wrapper in c++ that allows access to the original class (BaseClass) from c++ and the class library X (DerivedClass) from c++. In C++ i need to create a instance of the class library X and subsequently a subclass (DerivedClass) of it. 2) How should i approach this? In c++ I would create a static instance of the class library X and then call into the method contained within that object to create an instance of the derived class. Is this what would need to be done in objective-c? A: It really depends on what type of C

Two hundred five women attending a prenatal clinic at the National Naval Medical Center, Bethesda, Md, completed a questionnaire that explored changes in oral contraceptive use during pregnancy. Although 66% of the women used oral contraceptives before they became pregnant, only 25% maintained the pill throughout their pregnancy. The high rate of pill discontinuation is reported by other investigators, but the frequent use of long-acting agents as replacements is not. This report documents a significant change in oral contraceptive use during pregnancy.The Weasel Factory is a natural observation area, a place of tranquility where you will meet the local Andes and encounter the slow life of a brown bear.

misrepresentation because it was a statement of opinion as to the legal effect of the release and because Laurel did not rely on this statement. At trial Laurel had a memorandum from her attorney that she had relied on in signing the new draft contract and which included the signature of her attorney. This memorandum was admitted into evidence and indicated that the attorney advised Laurel that she was releasing all of her claims to the settlement amount regardless of the language of the release. The trial court also heard testimony that Laurel had previously consulted with an attorney about preparing the release before Laurel signed the new draft contract. Laurel, who testified that she had relied on her previous attorney in preparing the release, was present when he had advised her that the release was not a bar to further proceedings against Allstate. The trial court was entitled to believe Laurel's version of the facts, especially in light of her disclaimer of reliance on the opinion of others regarding the legal effect of the release. Laurel relies on two cases in support of her argument that the trial court erred in finding that her statement regarding the release had been a misrepresentation. First, she cites Grogan v. Fidelity & Cas. Co. of N.Y. (Sup. Ct. Dutchess Cty. 1986), 126 N.Y.S.2d 662, which states that a party's representation of opinion is not a misrepresentation. Second, Laurel cites In re Kellam (Kellam), 41 N.J. Super
