While we like to think of Santa as a jolly fellow in the North Pole, he's more likely to spend his holidays within Canada's borders. According to a new report by Nikita Popov, a research fellow at the MacEwan Institute for Capitalism and Economic Liberty at the University of Alberta, Santa's favourite presents are being delivered right here in this country. In fact, he likes them so much that he buys them using Canadian money. "[Santa's] buying his toys with Canadian dollars he gets from various retailers in Canada," Popov told BNN Bloomberg. "And he buys them from a variety of retailers in Canada ... so I think it's a pretty fair sample and I think he's getting an average." According to the report, Canadian retailers are more willing to sell their wares to Santa, particularly in urban areas. Popov said that the research isn't just for grins. "I think that people should take it seriously because ... he knows the good and bad retailers," he said. "He will just pick the ones that you would not really have reason to suspect that they are ... well, they could be doing anything."
