The thyroid controls body metabolism, including the rate at which your body burns calories. The thyroid also regulates the rate at which your body produces hormones. Tumors in the thyroid can arise from either the thyroid gland itself, or from the thyroid's nearby lymph nodes. Since the thyroid is a gland in the neck, tumors that arise from the thyroid gland tend to be more common and carry a better prognosis. Thyroid nodules, which are not cancerous, are also common, so thyroid cancer is not always preceded by a thyroid nodule. Thyroid cancer is most common in women and is rarely diagnosed before the age of 40. Types of Thyroid Cancer There are three main types of thyroid cancer: Thyroid papillary Thyroid follicular Thyroid medullary These types of cancer may or may not have a nodule. If it does, it is likely the cancer has already spread beyond the lymph nodes, and it is a metastatic thyroid cancer. In this case, the treatment is focused on managing the spread of the cancer. Papillary Thyroid Cancer Papillary thyroid cancer is the most common type of thyroid cancer. It grows quickly and early detection is critical to treatment. Papillary thyroid cancer develops gradually and has a high rate of cure. It grows into the thyroid from the thyroid follicles and may be found on the thyroid surface. Papillary thyroid cancer usually has a nodule. The nodule may be firm or soft, or it may be a cyst. It is important to know if the nodule or cyst is solid or soft, because that can influence treatment.
