If you're one of the many people who use your Mac for more than just basic office duties, then it's important that you have up-to-date apps and system tools. Fortunately, Apple regularly updates all of its software and most users should already be using the latest version of everything, but what about those who haven't? Once you've got the latest version, you can use the built-in system tools to refresh your apps, reset your system settings, backup your Mac and, of course, optimize it for the best possible performance. All these system tools are really easy to find on the Mac, but some users find the terminology a bit confusing, so we've gone through all of the available functions and explained them in easy-to-understand terms. One thing that's worth bearing in mind, though, is that you shouldn't be too aggressive with the system tools and they should only be used as a last resort. App Updates and Upgrades The first thing to do when updating your Mac is to find out what's new and what's different. Open App Store and click on Updates in the upper left-hand corner to view all of the apps that have been recently updated. You'll see a breakdown of each update, with the details including what improvements have been made to the app and what other changes you should be aware of. Some apps aren't updated all that often, so even if you're not 100% sure whether you want to update an app, it's worth making a note of the change for
