Q: Does jQuery function 'extend' need to be called each time new div is created? I'm using jQuery to extend functionality of a div. I have a button that adds a new div (this is new to me). Once created, the div has a click function attached to it, which calls a javascript function. The javascript function calls another javascript function that calls a jquery function. I was wondering if I need to call the extend function each time I create a div? for example `var thisDiv = $("#someDiv").extend({ click: function(){ // add extra divs here } });` Thanks A: No, it doesn't need to be called each time. From the docs: Note that any static properties added to $.extend will be copied to the new object, while any prototype properties will be copied as referenced. This can be overridden by passing true as the copy flag argument. The present invention relates generally to data processing,
