MSN7 Task Monitor is a simple tool that runs in the system tray and interacts with MSN Messenger in order to change your status message description depending on the applications that run on your computer. MSN7 Task Monitor is compatible with the old version of Windows Live Messenger, formerly known as MSN Messenger. It only works with MSN 7, which provides support for the 'What I Hear' function. The software provides a simple and clean interface that displays the list of known tasks. Besides that, it only comprises an option to refresh the list and the 'Edit List' button. The application monitors the running processes on your system and compares them to the list of known tasks. If it detects a known running process, it automatically changes your MSN Messenger status. The MSN7 Task Monitor Editor can be used to add up to 256 tasks to the list or remove items. When adding a new task, you are prompted to choose one application from the list of running processes, which can be a program or a game. The next step is to enter a name to be displayed by MSN7 Task Monitor and assign the task a custom message. This message is displayed under your name in the MSN 7 Messenger when the corresponding process is running. Finally, choose one of the the available icon options to show your buddies that you are working or playing games and the new task appears in the Editor window. MSN7 Task Monitor proved to be a handy tool for older MSN versions. Since MSN Messenger is no longer functional and Microsoft intends to drop support for Windows Live Messenger in the following months (as recently announced), tools such as MSN7 Task Monitor will no longer serve its purpose. All I can say is that it does not seem to work for all people. It does not seem to be even supported on the 7.5 release. @Adrien, I just started using it and it works fine. The best part is that it allows me to edit the list of tasks that I already created. I like it. It makes the MSN7 interface a bit easier. The only thing that bothers me is that it is not found in the Add/Remove Programs. I don't know if that is a bug or if it is intended that way. The program does not change my MSN Messenger Status description and if I close the window, it's not listed in the List of Programs. With the program, I can change my status message description depending on what programs are running on my computer. With the application, I can change my status message by right-clicking on any programs running in the Windows task bar and choosing from the options that appear. The program can work only if a Messenger account is activated, whereas the program can work without the Messenger software. The program is not working with Windows Live Messenger. The program is very simple and clean. It uses the standard windows user interface elements to show the list of running programs and the list of tasks. The program has 2 simple options in the menu, refresh and edit. In the edit option, the user can add and remove the tasks from the list. In the list of tasks, a new task can be added by typing a name and choosing an application from the list. If a new task is added, a new window opens where the user can enter a name
