Q: F# string/char array concatenation I found this question here: F# string concatenation of arrays? But the answer was not clear to me. I'd like to understand the explanation of @StephenC.Lott string[] delimitedArray = new string[] { "My", "e", "Array", ":", "Hello", "World" }; string result = string.Concat(delimitedArray); var sb = new StringBuilder(result); foreach (string c in delimitedArray) sb.Append(c); return sb.ToString();

For the concatenation of the string array with the delimiter, which is string result = string.Concat(delimitedArray); This is the explanation that I don't understand: string result = string.Concat(delimitedArray); In C#, it would be var result = string.Concat(delimitedArray.ToArray()); When using the ToArray() method, the array is copied to a new array. So for the example above var sb = new StringBuilder(result); foreach (string c in delimitedArray) sb.Append(c); Would be the equivalent to var sb = new StringBuilder(string.Concat(delimitedArray)); foreach (string c in delimitedArray) sb.Append(c); I don't understand why there is a difference. Is there a practical difference? A: You can imagine (in C#) what string.Concat(delimitedArray) does: It grabs the contents of the first array, and then copies them to the output string. If the delimitedArray were also an array, it would behave like this: // In C# (IDispatch strings) string result =
