Lightroom 5 is a fantastic piece of software. The only problem I have with it is I've just realized after reading the review that all of the presets in the library use .ldr files. I now have to open up all my images and re-export, which will take away some of the versatility that I enjoy about cataloging. I also have the same problem with the LR mobile app on the iPad. Once I render an image, I use the file explorer on the iPad and line up my images. None of them use a .ldr file. This is a serious issue for me since I cannot use my iPad with Lightroom. First off...I have had no issues at all with speed and file size, all the files you mention should work on any 1.0+ device - mine (1st gen) Processor/M1 runs perfectly beautifully. Thankfully, there has never been a time where it was slower than 5.0. So, what's new in LR 5? There are a few minor (read: not major changes) here...the Sharpening is now much more configurable (avg...sharp) and you can apply it as you go, from the little slider on the right of the previews window. There's also the now commented sharpening or smoothing...Whatever you call it, its an effect that makes the images overall 'rounder' without any quality loss. Its basically making the image look "greener". Well, no surprise there, as it seems like typical Apple/GIMP behavior. Be careful though, because if you can't remove the "roundness" - you'll loose the detail, or even quality of the image. If you're just looking for a basic version of Photoshop that feels and looks like Photoshop, I'll tell you that you can get it directly from Photoshop on the Mac App Store at a very reasonable price.
