Originally called "AutoPLAN", the first AutoCAD was developed by Albrecht Schmidt of Franz Mayer GmbH in Munich. He wanted to make it easier for German engineers to plan large projects using a combination of a mechanical CAD (CAD-PLANner) and vector graphics. In order to provide a graphical interface between the CAD and the engineer's design space, AutoPLAN was written to generate paper-bound reports on architectural drawings, and to plot lines on such drawings for use as floor plans. AutoPLAN was similar in nature to the commercially available Superplan, which was developed by Kurt Mühling at the Universität Stuttgart. Both systems were considered pioneering at the time they were released. AutoCAD's first version was 3.0, released in December 1982. This was not a stand-alone program but was a component of the AutoLISP operating system, marketed by the same company. It was the first microcomputer-based software application to include a built-in operating system. The core program could run as a standalone CAD or as an add-on to an existing operating system. Autodesk eventually released AutoLISP as a separate operating system. The AutoCAD first shipped with a proprietary graphics-based interface, which used machine language routines to generate lines and polygons on the screen. It used a mouse with a ball to provide input and a keyboard for editing. Many of these functions were provided as built-in commands in the command line interface. In 1983, Autodesk partnered with the United States Navy to provide the software for the US Navy's systems. A third-party company, the Crystal Design Group, took ownership of the software in 1986. In 1984, Autodesk introduced AutoCAD 2.0, a commercially available version of AutoPLAN software. In 1986, Autodesk released AutoCAD LT (Later renamed AutoCAD 2010), a version of AutoCAD that could be licensed at a cheaper price for smaller design work than AutoCAD itself. It required the purchase of an AutoCAD graphics card as well as a cheap version of the operating system it ran on. Autodesk started taking calls for government assistance, including advice on how to adapt AutoCAD for use by non-CAD users. With the release of AutoCAD 2.5 in November

Create a new drawing Effect of dietary selenium on the activities of glutathione peroxidase and thioredoxin reductase in the liver of rats. The effect of dietary selenium on the activities of glutathione peroxidase (GPx) and thioredoxin reductase (TrxR) in the liver of rats was investigated. The selenium level in the diet was set at 0.03, 0.06, 0.1, 0.2, 0.4, or 0.8 ppm (dry basis). The results showed that the activities of GPx and TrxR in the selenium-fed groups increased in a dose-dependent manner. The GPx activity in the group fed 0.8 ppm selenium was twice that in the group fed 0.03 ppm selenium, whereas the TrxR activity in the group fed 0.8 ppm selenium was three times that in the group fed 0.03 ppm selenium. There were positive correlations between the activities of GPx and TrxR (r=0.78). The activities of GPx and TrxR in the liver of rats fed 0.4 ppm selenium for 30 days were lower than those in the control group. The activities of GPx and TrxR were negatively correlated (r=-0.72). Thus, the activities of GPx and TrxR in the liver of rats could be regulated by dietary selenium concentration.. During the 2000-2001 season, the Senators entered the finals for the first time in franchise history, playing against the Vancouver Canucks. The Senators lost the series 4–1, and lost all three games at the Pacific Coliseum. The three games, however, were in close contests, with Vancouver winning one on the road and the other two in the Coliseum. The 2003–04 season marked the team's return to the Stanley Cup Finals. Coming off of a disappointing second-place finish the previous season, the Senators entered the playoffs as the second seed in the Eastern Conference. Ottawa had a much better start to the playoffs, but still lost the first two games of the series to the Buffalo Sabres in regulation, including the last three games of the series in Buffalo.

The ability to mark imported parts as "internal." This allows you to see which parts you marked in a drawing and to work on them while leaving the rest of the drawing untouched. Markup Import now automatically updates imported parts, giving you the option to overwrite parts or to merge them into the main drawing. The ability to import parts and an option to change the coloring of imported objects. The ability to mark imported parts as "final." This makes imported objects appear as "final," and lets you continue working on them while keeping the other objects in your drawing unchanged. View imported parts in 3D. Import and markup of PDF parts. Ability to import and markup partially "cut" parts with a pen. The ability to import and markup parts with an existing drawing. Rendering of imported parts. Import and markup of CAD parts: Rapidly send and incorporate feedback into your designs. Import feedback from printed paper or PDFs and add changes to your drawings automatically, without additional drawing steps. (video: 1:15 min.) The ability to import parts from more than one file. The ability to import parts with existing drawings. The ability to link imported parts with existing parts. The ability to view imported parts in 3D. Rendering of imported parts. Create and manage comments: Find, copy, and paste comments in the command palette, and use them on a specific object. (video: 2:12 min.) Create custom command sets for managing comments. Create comments in drawings or in parts (zones) that will be used for comments on a specific object. Export comments in XMI format for use in other CAD applications. Add comments to specific drawing objects in a second drawing. Compare comments: Compare multiple comments and report the differences. (video: 2:38 min.) Find and compare comments in a specific part. Create an overview of all comments that have been added to the current drawing. Create and manage text notes: Find, copy, and paste notes in the command palette, and use them on a specific object.
